Lisa Larkin, MD, FACP, NMCP, IF

2:15 p.m. – 3:15 p.m. - Low Sexual Desire in Women

Hypoactive sexual desire disorder (HSDD) in women is a sexual dysfunction that frequently goes unrecognized and untreated. Learn about its prevalence and impact on quality of life, communication strategies and screening tools effective for increasing the identification and diagnosis of patients with HSDD, and common causes and co-morbidities that should be addressed before initiating targeted treatment. The discussion will also focus on the efficacy and safety of approved, emerging, and off-label HSDD treatments.

3:15 p.m. – 4:15 p.m. - Vaginal & Sexual Health at Midlife

It is increasingly recognized that sexual health and well-being is an integral component of women's health. Although 80% of women in the U.S. believe that sex is a necessary component of a fulfilling life, most patients think physicians can do little to help their sexual problems. Persistent stigmatization of women's sexual health further hampers patient-physician communication. Family Physicians are, however, poised to affect meaningful change in the lives of women with sexual dysfunction, such as genitourinary syndrome of menopause (GSM). Learn about the prevalence of GSM and its impact on quality of life, and gather effective tools for communicating with, and developing individualized treatment strategies for, postmenopausal women with GSM.
